NEW IDEA IN "HELP"

Porto Rican Girls for Domestic Servants.

WAIALUA IS EXPERIMENTING

Not Difficult to Secure—Anxious to Please—Clean and Industrious.

Recent events in connection with the importation of Porto Ricans into these islands suggest, in the minds of several people on Oahu, at least, a solution of the servant problem.

Many of the younger girls who have arrived here at different times with the various lots of Porto Ricans are now in comfortable homes in the neighborhood of the plantations, getting wages that they would not be likely to get working in the cane fields for a long time to come.

At Waialua, where a considerable number of immigrants went to toil in the fields, there are several private families who have secured young girls, some of them whose parents are not living and who are in need of a good home, as nurses and cooks and housemaids. They are reported to be good workers, clean and tidy in their habits, and anxious to please.

Their greatest difficulty, at first, is the matter of language. But they seem to learn more readily than the Chinese or Japanese, and are more willing to adapt themselves to the customs of modern civilization than are the Orientals.

A Honolulu family received the other day a letter from a family in Waialua on this subject. Both families, like hundreds of others in this city, have had great trouble with their "help." The Waialua people advised the Honolulu family to hire a young Porto Rican girl to do the house work, saying that they, in Waialua, had been fortunate enough to get the services of such an efficient helper. The girl, who is an orphan, is acting as a nurse and housemaid, and was rapidly picking up English.

Many of the Porto Rican families coming here are as poor as it is possible for people to be, and almost, and parents are only too glad to let their children go to work for private families. It follows that the work is a great deal lighter and more agreeable than that on a plantation.

The family writing from Waialua states that when the girl at present in their service came to them she was in a pitiful state of rags and uncleanness after her long voyage at sea, and tiresome overland journey. She was sick, too, and had little inclination to work. Kindness, however, and a beneficial application of soap and water worked a marvellous transformation, and now the Waialua people would not part with their "hired girl" for a good deal.

SOLACE NINE WAS SHUT OUT

Oahuans Slaughter Ship Team and Pile Up a Hefty Score.

The Oahu College ball jugglers stumbled across an unexpected game yesterday. The officers of the transport Solace, now in port, have ideas on baseball, and happening to hear it mentioned that there was a nine in town, hankered for an encounter.

The Oahuans, curious to relate, got wind of the fact that a baseball nine was the pride of the hospital ship and it was not long before a meeting was arranged.

On Punahou pasture yesterday afternoon the nines met, and the result was hardly a solace to the visitors. Fourteen to nothing in favor of Punahou the score read when "assembly" blew, and the men of Mars returned to the through boat to Manila.

The college team was composed as follows:

Meyers, c.; Castle, p.; A. Marcellino, 1st base; J. Marcellino, 2d base; Williamson, 3d base; Campbell, shortstop; Perry, center field; Hapai, left field; Robinson, right field.

The Solace team was made up of R. Nicholson, F. B. Colby, J. F. Hatch, J. Louis Lohr, E. R. King, W. W. Rickard, E. Elston and two bluejackets.

Lieutenant Colby caught to E. R. King.

The visitors had not found their land legs, and it was evident from the start that they were no match for the Oahuans, who simply made runs at will. King pitched a good game, but the support accorded him was poor. Castle and Meyers were a good battery yesterday. Elston and Colby played a star game for their side.

Lieutenant Colby's work behind the bat was of a gilt edged order, and not a ball passed him. He used to catch for Harvard, and considering his lack of practice, played brilliantly.

Summary:
Base on balls, off King, 2; off Castle, 1. Errors, Solace, 10; Punahou, 3. Base hits, Solace, 10; Punahou, 16. Strike-outs, by King, 8; by Castle, 8.

Score by innings:
Punahou 14 10 31 310—14

Next Saturday afternoon Oahu College will play another game with the Christians.

The cricketers have decided not to practice on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, in order to give the baseball men a chance to practice on the Makiki ground on those days. Accordingly, there will be no cricket practice this afternoon.

The board of management of the Honolulu Cricket Club will meet this evening at the residence of the vice president, H. L. Herbert.
